

Well, things after the summer 2008 dates of the previous file are such that obviously there is little one feels like saying when he cannot figure much to do or report about other people doing about them. Hopefully this is not going to be always like that. Let's just go on with things that the more time passes since their initial dates the more they become relevant instead of obsolete, and with thinkers who do manage to keep invariantly relevant despite the events running like hell, and who do see relevance in running abreast with them despite, or rather through, using ways of thinking that do remain invariant.